The National Law Journal: Husch Blackwell's David Linenbroker Served as Saint Louis Art Museum Counsel in its Fight to Retain Ownership of Ka-Nefer-Nefer Mummy Mask

Husch Blackwell partner David Linenbroker and Dentons partner Patrick McInerney argued that the government failed to show "when the mask was stolen, the circumstances under which it was stolen, the location from which it was stolen, the person or persons who may have stolen the mask, whether there was any law enforcement investigation of the 'theft,' nor does it suggest any reason for the 33-year delay between discovery of the 'theft' and the report of the 'theft.'"
