Husch Blackwell Adds Commercial Litigator Ryan Bueche in Austin

Husch Blackwell announced today that Ryan Bueche has joined the firm as a partner in Austin, adding trial and appellate litigation depth to the commercial litigation practice.

Bueche brings to Husch Blackwell a combination of trial and appellate experience. He has served as lead trial counsel in cases involving seven-figure damages exposure, achieving favorable verdicts, and has supported litigation teams in larger, business-critical matters. As lead appellate counsel, he has briefed and argued appeals before multiple U.S. Courts of Appeals and the Texas Supreme Court, along with numerous Texas courts of appeals, in matters spanning product liability, commercial disputes, employment, jurisdictional issues, and insurance coverage.

“Our Austin litigation practice has grown substantially, and that growth has created strong demand for additional bench strength,” said Kyle Seelbach, partner and leader of Husch Blackwell’s commercial litigation practice.

“Adding someone with Ryan’s trial and appellate background allows us to continue serving that growing client base at a high level. This is a deliberate investment in the capacity our clients need as our Texas practice expands.”

“Husch Blackwell has built a commercial litigation platform with the scale and industry reach to support the kind of complex, multi-jurisdictional disputes my clients face,” Bueche said. “Joining a team that is actively growing in Austin gives me the opportunity to collaborate with colleagues across the firm to bring additional trial and appellate capacity to clients at a time when they need it most.”
