OVERVIEW

Joseph focuses on real estate work in the energy industry, assisting with transactions, regulatory matters, and project development.

Joseph chose a legal career in order to help others achieve their goals and resolve challenges, aiming to make a direct impact through practical solutions. Law offered the opportunity to combine analytical skills with a client-focused approach.

The energy real estate field appealed to Joseph because it brings together his interests in economics and geography, blending finance, business, and property principles. This interdisciplinary area allows for both problem-solving and collaboration.

During law school, Joseph served as executive editor for an international economic law journal, balancing legal analysis with managing a team and ensuring accuracy. This role provided exposure to a range of legal topics and reinforced the value of clear communication and attention to detail.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Joseph worked on real estate and energy projects, including title searches, regulatory research, and drafting memoranda. These experiences built practical skills in transactional work and deepened his understanding of the energy sector.

Previous roles in sales and product support taught Joseph the importance of active listening, clear communication, and creative problem-solving. These skills support a client-centered practice focused on understanding needs and achieving results.
