OVERVIEW

Christian focuses on real estate work, managing transactions, zoning issues, and development projects for clients.

Christian decided to pursue law to work in a service-oriented field that values problem-solving and finding practical solutions to new challenges every day. His goal is to help clients by addressing complex issues and making the process as smooth as possible.

Real estate law was a natural fit for Christian, who grew up around transportation and zoning discussions thanks to parents who are civil engineers. Early professional experience at the Texas Department of Transportation deepened this interest, providing firsthand exposure to land and infrastructure projects. Law school coursework in real estate transactions and drafting, taught by practicing attorneys, further developed his practical skills.

Christian gained valuable experience as a judicial intern with the U.S. District Court in Texas, learning the importance of thorough research and understanding the decision-making process in chambers. An in-house externship with Trail Drive Management offered insight into the daily concerns of clients and in-house counsel, building a strong foundation for client-focused legal service.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Christian worked on real estate matters such as zoning conflicts, leasing agreements, and development disputes, as well as corporate and transactional projects.
