OVERVIEW

Keegan litigates and advises on the disputes and decisions that shape family legacies. As a private wealth attorney, he represents fiduciaries—including trustees, executors, and banks—in complex trust and estate matters, and helps high-net-worth individuals and families preserve wealth, safeguard legacies, and plan for future generations.

Prior to joining Husch Blackwell, Keegan practiced at an estate planning and probate boutique, where he handled hundreds of matters across diverse client situations. He drafted and executed estate planning documents—including wills, revocable and irrevocable trusts, and asset protection instruments—and guided clients through probate and trust administration. He also advised affluent clients and business owners on estate tax strategies, asset transfers, and generational wealth protection. His experience with families navigating intricate dynamics, sensitive trust administrations, and sophisticated financial structures gives him a deep understanding of how plans are implemented and how disputes can arise.

Clients value Keegan's steady, approachable counsel and his ability to translate complex and sensitive issues into clear, practical guidance. Known for his honesty and responsiveness, he helps clients feel informed and confident in their decisions.

Keegan pursued a career in law to help people achieve meaningful goals they could not accomplish on their own—a purpose that makes private wealth law a natural fit. He combines strong technical skill with a practical, execution-focused approach, coordinating the legal, financial, and personal elements of sophisticated planning and representing fiduciaries in trust and estate disputes. With an undergraduate degree in accounting, he is particularly comfortable navigating the financial aspects of complex matters while building lasting relationships with the families he serves.
