OVERVIEW

Bridget represents manufacturers, distributors, property owners, contractors, and other businesses in complex product liability, toxic tort, and commercial litigation matters. She is particularly experienced in defending claims involving silica and other environmental and occupational exposure allegations.

With more than two decades of litigation experience, Bridget advises clients through all stages of disputes, from early case assessment and discovery through trial and resolution. She develops litigation strategies, conducts depositions, drafts and argues motions, and works closely with technical experts to address scientific, regulatory, and causation issues that frequently arise in toxic tort matters.

Bridget's practice has included the defense of manufacturers and other businesses in product liability, toxic tort, premises liability, transportation, and commercial litigation matters. Clients value her practical approach, courtroom experience, and ability to navigate high-stakes disputes efficiently while remaining focused on business objectives.
