OVERVIEW

Alex represents clients in commercial litigation matters.

Prior to law school, Alex spent several years working in the U.S. Senate, where his exposure to legislative and public policy issues furthered his interest in pursuing a legal career. During his time on Capitol Hill, Alex worked on a range of commerce issues while strengthening the research, writing, and analytical skills central to legal practice. That experience also fostered a focus on constitutional law and the legal foundations underlying the legislative process, an interest Alex carried directly into his law school coursework.

Service

Commercial Litigation

Litigation appealed to Alex because it combines rigorous legal analysis with the opportunity to advocate for clients facing complex challenges. He was particularly drawn to the strategic nature of litigation and the opportunity to develop persuasive arguments tailored to the circumstances of each case.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Alex worked alongside attorneys handling a variety of commercial litigation matters, an experience that deepened Alex's interest in the field and offered early exposure to how litigation strategy takes shape in practice, from case assessment through the drafting of motions and briefs.

Alex approaches each matter with thoughtful analysis and diligence, emphasizing responsive communication to ensure clients remain informed and prepared throughout the process.
