OVERVIEW

Carrington helps clients in the energy industry with real estate needs, including financing, regulatory matters, and project development.

An analytical mindset drew Carrington toward law school. Undergraduate research in mathematics reinforced that pull, showing the appeal of a career built around creating something tangible rather than working in the abstract.

As a law student, property was Carrington's favorite course and a stint in Washington University's Interdisciplinary Environmental Clinic deepened an interest in real estate matters with a regulatory dimension.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Carrington worked with a variety of practice groups, conducting legal research, drafting memoranda, and performing due diligence. Carrington enjoyed working with the energy real estate group in particular, not only for the subject matter, but because of how collaborative the team is and how closely its attorneys work with clients.

Known for a strong work ethic and genuine empathy, Carrington listens closely to understand what clients need. Clients can expect an attentive, engaged approach from someone who is invested in getting the details right and committed to seeing each matter through carefully.
