OVERVIEW

Aaron is a litigator with global experience helping clients resolve high-value, complex commercial disputes.

With a focus on commercial litigation, Aaron has represented multinational companies in multimillion-dollar cases, often across international borders. His experience includes successfully representing clients in business litigation, major domestic and international arbitrations seated in the United States and abroad, and high-profile internal investigations.

Aaron has experience across multiple industries, including healthcare, energy, financial services, and manufacturing. He has represented clients in jurisdictions nationwide and arbitrations under the leading arbitration rules including those of the American Arbitration Association (AAA), International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), London Court of International Arbitration (LCIA), and United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL).

Aaron's focus is working with clients to develop coherent, comprehensive, and cost-effective strategies. Clients appreciate his experience in navigating highly regulated industries.

Community Leadership

After training as a violinist from a young age through his undergraduate years, he continues to enjoy playing chamber music, especially in string quartets. He also works closely with two St. Louis nonprofits, the Bach Society of Saint Louis, where he serves as Director and Secretary, and the Community Music School of Webster University, where he is President of the Advisory Board, Strategic Planning Committee. Both organizations aim to provide regional musical performance and education opportunities.
