OVERVIEW

With a pre-law professional background in banking, Shianne focuses her practice on banking and finance law.

Shianne is a finance attorney whose hands-on experience in risk management gives her a rare and invaluable perspective into the financial and regulatory complexities of large-scale infrastructure projects and project financing. Having started her career in risk management and regulatory oversight at a government-sponsored financial institution, she brings a deep understanding of compliance, internal controls, and stakeholder coordination—critical skills for ensuring financial integrity in complex infrastructure deals.

At Husch Blackwell, Shianne helps clients structure and execute sophisticated financings for energy, utilities, and data center developments. Her attention to detail, strategic insight, and collaborative approach make her not just a dependable lawyer but a true partner for clients navigating multifaceted financing structures—from development through execution.

Shianne's background means that she's gone through regulatory exams, risk assessments, and internal controls firsthand, and she's deeply familiar with the daily world of banking and finance clients. She knows the importance of being detail-oriented and understanding the overarching strategy behind a project, and she's also aware of the variety of internal stakeholders involved in every decision. Shianne is dedicated to ensuring that clients meet regulatory requirements while their systems continue to function seamlessly.
