OVERVIEW

Adam approaches legal challenges with the focus and determination of a seasoned professional, honed from his background in sports management.

Enthusiastic about the idea of daily intellectual challenges, Adam began considering a legal career as a high school student. However, he was first drawn to the sports and entertainment industry, accepting a post-college job as an account manager with the Houston Astros. His seven years with the team instilled in him vital skills like exceptional time management, a robust work ethic, and the importance of a positive attitude—all traits that fuel his approach to law today.

As a law student, Adam thrived in the competitive arena of alternative dispute resolution, honing his negotiation and mediation skills, ultimately becoming a certified mediator. His excelled in tax law as well thanks to his analytical acuity—making him an excellent fit for the Private Wealth team. As a summer associate with the firm, he was drawn to the practice area thanks to its direct client impact and the passionate Husch Blackwell team.

Adam now concentrates his practice on comprehensive tax and estate planning, trust and estate administration, business succession planning, tax transfer, gift and estate tax return preparation, and generation-skipping trust planning. He's committed to offering support to clients as they navigate pivotal decisions about their futures and legacies.

Those who work with Adam can expect a dependable and personable lawyer. His notable dedication and client-centric approach underscore his reputation
