OVERVIEW

Sarah represents clients in complex commercial litigation.

Sarah's path to law began as a first-generation lawyer inspired by undergraduate political science courses and a job at a law firm as a college student. The encouragement from seasoned attorneys solidified her decision to pursue a legal career.

During law school, Sarah gained significant experience through externships and journal work. She served on Emory's Corporate Governance and Accountability Review, where she analyzed global legal issues, including the impact of Russian sanctions on U.S. businesses. Her externships at the Georgia House of Representatives and the Federal Trade Commission also provided her with a unique perspective on the intersection of law and government.

Known for her honesty, dependability, and compassion, Sarah is committed to delivering focused and thorough work. Clients can expect her to approach each case with a high level of care and understanding, ensuring their needs are met.
