OVERVIEW

Angela focuses her practice on complex, expert-driven litigation, with particular emphasis on product liability matters and the representation of nonprofit and religious institutions.

She represents clients in high-stakes disputes involving technically sophisticated products, historical claims, and sensitive risk-management issues, bringing a disciplined and strategic approach to every phase of litigation.

Angela has significant experience in handling discovery and motion practice, especially in cases that require comprehensive development of both expert and factual evidence. She regularly coordinates discovery strategy, collaborates with experts, and plays a central role in shaping litigation themes from pre-litigation claim evaluations. Her work frequently involves assessing exposure early, developing defensible litigation positions, and aligning strategy with clients' broader business and institutional goals.

In product liability matters, Angela handles cases involving complex technology and scientific issues, requiring careful expert coordination and mastery of technical records. She has participated extensively in expert discovery and trial preparation, including mock trial work, and is experienced in litigating discovery disputes in both state and federal courts.

Angela also represents religious and other nonprofit institutions in matters involving historical claims and risk-management concerns. She works closely with institutional clients, insurers, and claims
