OVERVIEW

Nathan defends clients in antitrust cases and other complex commercial litigation matters.

As part of the firm's litigation team, Nathan handles matters that include breach of contract allegations, trademark issues, False Claims Act cases, and various other business disputes that often involve high stakes and complicated details. Nathan is particularly drawn to antitrust litigation, where the intersection of economics and law presents unique challenges. He also works on large-scale, multi-district litigation and class action suits, and usually represents major corporations, with a particularly strong background in the healthcare sector.

Nathan's approach to litigation is shaped by years of competitive debate at both the high school and college levels. Both oral advocacy and in-depth research have always been passions, and litigation allows Nathan to bring both skills to the table. With a strongly competitive nature, he loves to achieve favorable results for clients.

Clients value Nathan's dedication and commitment to their matters. He understands the importance of keeping clients informed and making sure deadlines are met, while also focusing on effective and efficient representation. Clients know that their cases are in capable hands and that every effort is being made to resolve issues in their favor. Nathan brings energy, attention to detail, and a strong sense of responsibility to every engagement, helping clients navigate even the most complex disputes with confidence.
