OVERVIEW

Melissa defends asbestos clients in every stage of contested litigation.

Melissa manages a high volume of toxic tort cases, guiding each matter from motions and pleadings to discovery and depositions, all the way through hearings and trials. Most of her work centers on asbestos litigation in California, where she has represented the full range of toxic tort clients, including manufacturers, suppliers, and premises owners. She has extensive experience as second and third chair at jury trials, always preparing each case as if it will go all the way to verdict.

Drawn to the adrenaline of litigation and oral argument since her law school days, Melissa has practiced in the California asbestos world for more than 20 years. She's readily familiar with the challenges defendants face in tough jurisdictions, and she knows how to achieve favorable settlements in spite of this environment. Melissa has a knack in discovery and investigation for finding the weak point that will let her establish holes in the plaintiff's case—and help her persuade opposing counsel that they're better off making a deal.

Clients value Melissa's deep knowledge of California toxic tort, as well as her quick responsiveness. She builds rapport easily, helping her move cases toward better results and more favorable settlements. Known as always unflappable, Melissa is a calm, affective advocate who steadily guides clients through high stakes matters.
