OVERVIEW

Shevani assists clients in the energy sector with real estate needs.

Shevani knew from a very young age that she wanted to pursue a legal career. She values the interdisciplinary nature of law, as well as the opportunities it presents to address important issues. Similarly, her interest in real estate and energy work comes from a long-standing passion for clean energy. Shevani is motivated by the chance to work on projects that support sustainable solutions and have a direct impact on communities.

During law school, Shevani participated in two semesters of the Environmental and Community Engagement Clinic, gaining practical experience working with environmental issues and community-focused projects. She was also active with the Virginia Environmental Law Journal, further developing her research and writing skills. Courses in immigration and privacy law added to her understanding of how legal frameworks affect people and organizations. Shevani also served as a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, where she gained hands-on experience in real estate and energy matters. She contributed to projects that required careful research, attention to detail, and collaboration with colleagues.

Shevani is known for being hardworking, diligent, and easy to communicate with. Clients value her ability to listen, respond quickly, and approach each matter with a practical mindset. She brings reliability and strong communication to every project.
