OVERVIEW

Shyanne handles commercial litigation matters, guiding clients through disputes and helping resolve complex business issues.

Driven by a desire to advocate for others and an interest in building strong arguments, Shyanne always knew a legal career—especially in litigation—was the right path. Law school provided valuable experience through active participation in mock trial, which helped her develop courtroom skills and refine advocacy techniques. An internship with Judge Marie Williams at the Hamilton County Circuit Court also offered insight into judicial decision-making and highlighted the importance of clear legal writing in litigation.

Prior to law school, Shyanne worked at the Tennessee State Museum, managing educational programs and leading tours focused on state government and history. This role strengthened her communication skills and reinforced her commitment to helping others understand complex topics.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Shyanne worked on a wide range of matters, including research, drafting memorandums, and preparing for hearings. Exposure to different practice areas helped her identify a strong interest in litigation and provided a practical understanding of the work involved.

Clients can expect Shyanne to be passionate, caring, and dedicated. She is known for her diligent approach, strong communication, and commitment to delivering thoughtful, well-prepared work on every matter.
