OVERVIEW

Alexandra focuses on healthcare regulatory and compliance matters, helping clients navigate complex rules in the healthcare industry.

Alexandra chose to pursue a career in law to merge her passion for learning and problem-solving with the intellectual challenge of interpreting nuanced laws and regulations. Her interest in regulatory law began after her first year of law school, when she spent the summer working at a wealth management firm in their in-house regulatory and compliance department. A health law and policy course in law school later inspired her to pursue a regulatory career focused on the healthcare industry, where she now helps clients interpret and comply with intricate legal frameworks to deliver high-quality care with confidence.

As a summer associate at Husch Blackwell, Alexandra worked on a wide array of healthcare regulatory matters, including hospital licensing, federal fraud and abuse laws, and value-based care regulations.

Known for being approachable, proactive, and thorough, Alexandra empowers clients by translating complex laws and regulations into clear, actionable strategies that support confident decision-making. By closely tracking developments in healthcare law, she ensures her guidance remains timely, relevant, and responsive to the evolving regulatory landscape.
